The Mokena Garden Club with Mrs. Anton Benson, president, has been instrumental in bringing about the restoration of the old burial plot so it can be made into a memorial park in honor of the early pioneers of the community who are buried here.

Outstanding among those resting in the sacred spot are, Charles Denny, a revolutionary soldier who died in 1839, just about 100 years ago; two Civil War veterans, Abraham Evans and Charles Brill.

Frankfort Firemen Host To Visiting Fire Laddies

The Frankfort Volunteer Fire Department was host to 171 members of the Suburban Community Firemen's Association of Cook and Will Counties in the Frankfort hall, Tuesday evening.

The meeting was very interesting and a number of important matters were discussed. Most of the fire departments, make runs to fires outside of the incorporate villages. It was pointed out that if any fireman should be injured while engaged fighting fires outside of his village he could not collect insurance compensation, but on the other hand, other firemen present declared, their insurance policies had special riders covering this point agreeing to pay such claims. It was declared that when a village takes out a blanket insurance policy covering its firemen, close watch should be exercised to see that the proper rider appears on the policy.

Another matter brought out was that every home owner or renter should be warned to see that bird's nests are removed from eave-troughs and rain spouts. It was shown where costly fires had resulted from sparks dropping into the dry bird nests.

A communication from the State Firemen's Association was read relative to the legislature killing the firemen's pension bill.

At the close of the session Mayor George Sangmeister of Frankfort, was introduced and gave a brief summary concerning the organization of the Frankfort Fire Department, showing how a fund of $3300 was raised among the farmers toward the purchase of the fine new fire truck now in use, on the condition that they be given fire protection.

Mayor Sangmeister further stated that all the members of the village board, including the mayor, are members of the fire department, which now has 37 members.

Members of the Frankfort Village Board, Fire Chief Henry Lühring and visitors were introduced to the firemen.

At the close of the meeting, the famous "Root Diggers" furnished musical entertainment and the Frankfort Firemen proved themselves to be royal hosts. They provided the visitors with a bountiful supply of eats and drinks. Everyone was happy and enjoyed a most delightful time.

The next meeting of the Suburban Community Firemen's Association will be held in Robbins.

Advocate Flashers Be Installed

The coroner's jury hearing the evidence in the automobile-train crash which resulted in the death of Chas. Albert of Alpine last Thursday when his auto was struck by the fast Wabash limited the Banner Blue on the 167th street crossing, recommended that as this crossing is unprotected flashers be installed as a means of protection.

100 People To Take Part In Marley Pageant

Over a hundred people will take part in the original historical pageant, "Our American Album", which will feature the 57th annual Marley 4th of July picnic at Storm's Grove, Marley.

In answer to the correct challenge that if democracy is to survive it must be made more glamorous and dramatic the pageant will present incidents of early and modern American history which emphasize the traditions and ideals of democracy. Paul Revere will again warn America that the British are coming; President Lincoln will again deliver his Gettysburg address; and American dough-boys will once more fight to make the world safe for democracy.

The event will be presented at 10:30 a. m., daylight saving time, upon an outdoor stage in the picnic grove. The libretto, written by Mrs. E. W. Bush of Marley, will be read over a public address system by her daughter, Miss Clara Bush. The Mokena High School Band, under the direction of Mr. Howard Strom, will play a short concert before the pageant and will furnish the background music for many of the scenes. Arrangements are being made for the seating of over 2000 visitors.

Blue Ribbons Awarded At Holstein Exhibit

Tuesday a very interesting stock show was held in the Geuther grove on route 45 a short distance north of Frankfort.

About 90 head of Holstein-Friesian cattle were exhibited and members of 4H clubs of Will, Cook and Kane counties took part in the judging.

Dairy farmers from the three counties were present and were vitally interested in this excellent dairy breed. This particular breed is outstanding for its excellent milk production.

Quite a number of blue ribbons were awarded. Jack Brock of DeKalb was the chief judge of the stock.

Cook County Farm Bureau officials, Mr. Hughes, Chas. Glover, Will county farm advisor, L. W. Braham, Howard Klett of Elwood, prominent Will County Pure Milk Association official and L. A. Potter, of the Illinois Agricultural Association of Chicago were present.

A milk maid beauty contest was staged later in the afternoon.

Plenty of eats and refreshments were served. The flowing well in the Geuther grove furnished plenty of pure, cold water.

Tinley Gets Good Road Work Prices

A special meeting of the Tinley Park village board was held Tuesday night of this week and was a busy one for all.

Sealed bids were opened for the repaving and fixing of 173rd street from 66th court to 70th Ave. The low bidder was the Rock Road Construction Co. They were awarded the contract. Finding the company in such a generous mood, the village trustees tackled the representative of the company in good humor until he consented to reduce a bid of $575 for fixing the 1150 square yards in front of Vogt's store to the extremely reasonable price of $400.

Not satisfied with the company's surrender the trustees persuaded them to fix the west side of Oak Park ave., from John Funk's store to the Rock Island railroad tracks for the sum of $90. These prices are rock bottom prices and the village trustees of Tinley Park are surely to be congratulated on obtaining such favorable contracts.

Work Progressing New Lenox WPA School Project

By Milton Borgess

The task of refacing the New Lenox public school with brick and constructing additional room on the building is well under way.

The work, a WPA project, is being accomplished at a cost of $68,214 and should be completed in not more than seven months from this date. The Federal Government is contributing $55,631 to the project while the New Lenox school board is appropriating the remaining $12,583.

The temporary school building which was erected on the south side of the building, has been sold for $280. Three new class rooms are now being built on its site and foundations have also been laid for construction of a utility room on the east side of the school.

A new heating plant, new roof new floors in all the rooms of the old building except the gymnasium, and landscaping of the school yard, with rock garden possibilities for the front of the building are all part of the plan.

PWA MEN EMPLOYED

The forty-five men who are working on this project, will have laid 65,000 face brick and will have mixed 885 tons of sand and gravel with 420 barrels of cement, before completing the job.

N. S. Burnham of Chicago is superintendent of this work and Dewey Moore of New Lenox, is assistant superintendent.

Mokena Tames Wild Tigers

CHILD OF EVIL

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN
WNU SERVICE

By OCTAVUS ROY COHEN

SYNOPSIS

Beautiful, young Kay Forrest has been employed by Christine Maynard, photographer, to pose for a series of pictures, the background of which will be exquisite Cathedral Gardens, famous Southern resort. Unknown to them, one Jeff Butler, mean, unscrupulous "swamp angel," has led a friend to spy on the two women. Kay, of necessity, is scantily clad while posing for the camera studies. Kay frequently stays with Mrs. Ruth Hamilton, her son Barney, of whom Kay is very fond, and her daughter Margaret. Mrs. Hamilton, a remarkable woman, conceived the idea of the Gardens following the death of her husband. Kay has accepted an invitation to attend a local dance with Kirk Reynolds, a ne'er-do-well gambler.

Tonight Kay Forrest put her wrap in the tiny room on the mezzanine which was marked Ladies. She left that room, walked out on the balcony and gazed down upon the vivid scene below. The music of the Jazz Hounds rose to smite her, and a lady tourist, dancing indifferently, looked up and saw the girl on the balcony and said, "There's a beautiful girl."

As a matter of cold fact, the compliment was not entirely deserved. True, there were things about Kay which were lovely—and which you forgot. There were other things which you remembered—as for instance the immediate impression of vital youth, of a great capacity for enjoyment as shown by dancing eyes and a wide, generous mouth.

You could not fail to notice the deep brown tones of her hair and the way it was brushed back from her high, white forehead, and the natural wave, and the little curls which clung to the back of her neck and caressed the two tiny ears. You would notice that her hazel eyes were set wide apart and that they had a delightful habit of crinkling at the corners when she smiled.

She was not blasé, not critical. She asked no more of the moment than the moment offered. She met Kirk Reynolds on the stairway and Kirk's customarily impassive face lighted. He said, "You look good."

He walked back downstairs with her, through the lobby, past the battery of approving masculine eyes, and into the ball-room. His arms went about her responsive young body and they danced.

Kirk smiled down at the girl. His was not a bright smile. It was a slight expansion of thin lips. But his voice was gentle enough. He asked, "Having a good time?"

"Wonderful."

"You're easily pleased."

"I can't help it. I'm enjoying myself."

He said, "You're a queer kid."

"Because I like this so much?"

"Yes. And because you had the nerve to come with me."

Her eyes laughed into his. "You're pretty nice, Kirk Reynolds."

"Maybe. But this town don't think so."

Kirk did not exaggerate. He was held in low esteem in Beverly, save by a certain masculine group which made its headquarters at Red Williams' Bon Ton Pool Room. Careful mothers shielded their daughters from contact with Kirk—much to the disgust of several such daughters; fathers warned young sons that Kirk was a disgrace to the town and to his worthy parents—now happily deceased. And as for Mr. Reynolds himself, that young gentleman went his way unconcerned, caring not one whit for the opinion of his fellow-townsmen save insofar as they afforded him a bit of amusement.

He was of medium height and slender. His cheeks were pallid; his eyes arctic. He was sparing of speech and gesture. Born in Beverly, reared in Beverly—Kirk Reynolds was known to every citizen of the town and most of those who lived in rural parts of the county. As a youngster he had shown a superb indifference to such education as Beverly afforded. Other lads had looked up to him as reckless and daring because of the flagrant manner with which he played hooky. He was the despair of his parents; accepting such chastisement as they inflicted upon him without whimper, protest or effect.

At seventeen years of age he had disappeared, his farewell being coincidental with the departure of a small, traveling street carnival which had spent six thoroughly unprofitable days in the town. Thereafter Beverly heard little of him. It was understood vaguely that Kirk had remained with the carnival only a short time, and that he then aligned himself with a larger, more prosperous and less scrupulous tent-show. Some one reported meeting him in New York and stated that he seemed to be doing well and had offered hospitality to his former townsmen: liquor, feminine companionship, gambling, or what have you.

Then Beverly was shocked to learn that Kirk had returned. In his rooms at the hotel, enterprising persons, tourists or citizens, might roll dice for money. For fairly important money. No, they explained in shocked whispers, it wasn't just a friendly game, but a real gambling layout.

Meetings were held. Protests were uttered by church committees and welfare organizations. Mayor Alex Roberts argued that he did not know officially that gambling was in progress, which resulted in the immediate formation of a Defeat-Roberts-for-Renomination Committee. Sheriff Floyd Griffin denied vehemently that Kirk Reynolds owned and operated a dice-game—but he completed his payments on a new sedan. The owner of the White Star Hotel also protested vigorously that there was nothing happening in that second-floor suite which was illegal, and he denied further that liquor could be bought at the hotel, in defiance of rigid State prohibition laws . . . all of which the good citizens knew to be untrue.

Kirk's dice-dealer remained in seclusion except at night. Kirk himself spent his days riding around in his little car or lounging on the veranda of the hotel which faced Monument Square from the corner of Wilson Street. He vouchsafed no information. And so facts became less factual because of official denial and every night certain tourists more or less enjoyed a few hours at the dice-table, and Beverly raised its hands in holy horror, and the preachers of town and country churches called upon their congregations to condemn this iniquity . . . which they did with commendable but ineffectual fervor. And there the matter dropped, except that it was generally agreed that if Ruth

"There's a beautiful girl."

Hamilton hadn't returned to Beverly and caused Cathedral Gardens to be built, Kirk Reynolds and his professional vice would not have come to contaminate the community.

Kirk Reynolds was twenty-eight years of age, nine years older than Kay Forrest. She had heard of him, had known him, in the few years of her childhood before he had gone off with the carnival. She remembered him as a handsome young man who had bought candy and ice-cream and pop-corn for her at the carnival so that she almost died of indigestion . . . but she had emerged from the attack with a regard for Kirk which she had never lost. She had introduced herself to him on the occasion of a chance meeting after his return, and he had professed to remember her.

Kirk was attentive and pleasant. Two or three times during the evening, when young men from Chicora with whom she had attended high school asked her to dance—Kirk vanished. She suspected that he had gone upstairs to see how the dice-game was running and there was a guilty thrill in the idea. Kay was young, keen for life: she translated this night and this dance into terms of Newport and Monte Carlo and Palm Beach and Havana. The chicken sandwich on toast which Kirk brought her might have been a gala repast; the tepid orangeade, champagne.

Then Bud Carter and His Jazz Hounds blasted into their final number. Enthusiastic couples gyrated madly, but Kirk danced slowly, cautiously—as always. He continued to enjoy Kay's naive delight, to respond to the brightness of her eyes. She heard the final, blaring measures of the music, and then Kirk's quiet voice, "Tired?"

"No."

"How about a little ride?"

"I'd love it."

"Good." Kirk was never loquacious.

She crossed the veranda with him. Across the street, in the middle of Monument Square, she saw the red-brick bulk of the Beauregard County Court-house. She was vaguely conscious of townsmen who stared and commented. And then she was in the little coupe beside Kirk and he had swung away from the curb and was circling the Square.

He drove west on Palmetto Avenue to the place where Chicora Avenue angled off to the right. He drove down this tree-lined street, snuggled in midnight moonlight; drove past Kay's home; crossed Ferris Street where Chicora Avenue became the Chicora Turnpike. Then they were in the country, the lights of the town dropping behind them.

To their left was rich farm country: fields of cotton and corn, and on the right crouched Big Moccasin Swamp, dark and sinister. They moved faster and faster and Kay asked no questions. It did not matter that the man beside her was Kirk Reynolds; it only mattered that she was here: that for this one night she had been privileged to discard the soggy mantle of provincialism.

Kirk said, abruptly, "I had a good time."

"You did? Why?"

"Because you enjoyed it."

"Oh! Kirk—it was wonderful. I've always wanted to go to one of those dances . . ."

"They're lousy. But if you don't know it, why that's all right, too."

She said, "You've been mighty nice to me."

"And I got a great kick out of you." He smiled at her, briefly, impersonally. "Where'd you get your nerve from?"

"What nerve?"

"The nerve to go with me . . . and to get the whole town talking about you?"

She explained, "They've always talked about me, and I reckon they always will."

"When I was younger than you are now, I checked out. Couldn't stand the gaff."

"But you came back."

"Good pickings."

Kay wondered why she was not apprehensive. Kirk's reputation was so unsavory. She wondered whether he intended to stop somewhere . . . and then, as though in response to her unasked question . . . he looked down at her. He said, "Don't worry."

"About what?"

"Me. I'm not aiming to park anywhere."

She was silent, and he laughed shortly. "Thought I was, didn't you?"

"Well . . . the boys around here . . ."

"I don't play that way, myself. Not with kids."

She felt absurdly safe. She lost all sense of time and of distance. Her eyes were closed, so that she did not even see the headlights of the car which whirled toward them.

The road they were traveling had been cut through piney woods. It was of broad, smooth concrete and Kirk was driving fast, and on the wrong side. His own head-lamps stabbed into the post-midnight blackness and crossed those of the approaching car.

Kay heard the sudden warning shriek of a horn. She heard a hoarse oath from the young man at her side. She felt his figure lurch against hers and stiffen as he jerked at the wheel.

Then there was a sickening swerve and a breath-taking skid. She opened her eyes to see another car skidding, to find headlights blazing into her face. It was over instantly—yet it seemed to take hours. The approaching car swung off the road in the effort to avoid Kirk. Kirk jerked his to the right . . . and there they were, these two cars, running-board to running-board—the gentleness of their contact a mockery of the tragedy which might have been.

It had been an awful moment, a terrifying moment. Kay experienced some difficulty in breathing. In the glare of their own headlights she recognized Harvey Jackson, a young civil engineer who had lived in Beverly all his life. She saw that his cheeks were pasty. He seemed frightened—and angry. She knew that Kirk was trembling with fury and nervous reaction. She heard his voice, cold as snapping icicles.

"Why the hell don't you look where you're driving?"

Harvey Jackson's face flushed. He said, "It was your fault, Reynolds."

The girl glanced at Kirk, and was frightened. She heard him saying things to the other man: insulting things, profane things. He was bitter and unfair. His words knifed into Harvey Jackson and Kay realized that even so placid a person as the young engineer was losing control of himself. Jackson said, "Lay off that, Kirk. I don't like it."

"I don't give a damn what you like."

Kay put out her hand. "Please, Kirk . . ."

He shook her off. Roughly. Otherwise, he gave no hint that he knew she was there.

"I told you to quit talking like that," said Harvey Jackson.

"And I tell you . . ." Kirk was in the grip of an unreasonable rage. "When you say it was my fault, Jackson, you lie!"

Harvey Jackson climbed out of his car. He said, "I don't take that from any man, Reynolds."

"You'll take it from me."

"Not if you get out of that car."

"I'll get out all right."

Kay's protest was lost in the night. She knew it was all Kirk's fault: the original accident, the bitterness of the unnecessary quarrel, the impending fight.

And it was going to be a fight. Kirk was beyond control. Harvey Jackson was flushed and angry. He stood in the road with fists clenched, waiting. He looked competent—and dangerous. He was larger than Kirk: taller and broader. He said, "I'm warning you, Reynolds—"

Even in that moment Kay knew that Kirk was at fault. She could not blame Harvey Jackson. He had sought to avoid this clash, his patience had been stretched beyond the point of resiliency. Kay was sorry for both men. She knew that this crisis had flared from nerves strained by the shock of imminent disaster. The impending conflict was senseless—and inevitable. She wanted to look away, but she couldn't. The scene fascinated her: the quiet, deserted road; the dreadful accident which had so miraculously been averted; the deadly fury which had metamorphosed Kirk.

And then the awful thing happened. Suddenly. Unbelievably. She had read about such things. She had seen them in pictures. But never—until this moment—had she believed they could be.

Even now when she saw Kirk's hand snap out from under his left armpit; when she heard the sharp, vicious crack of the little automatic; when she saw flame spit into the night . . . even then it was unbelievable. It was only when she saw an expression of startled incredulity appear on the face of Harvey Jackson, that the thing became real—even in the slightest degree.

Never before had she seen a human being die. It was nauseating, the way his body sagged, slowly; then slumped to the ground. She jumped from the car and bent over him, eyes wide with horror and disbelief; brain refusing to credit the evidence of her senses. She was conscious of the horrid thought that Harvey Jackson couldn't be comfortable, lying all sprawled out that way. She reached out to touch the body but strong fingers closed on her arm and an icy voice said, "Let him alone."

She was sobbing when Kirk jerked her back to the car and flung her into the seat. She said, "You're not going to leave him there . . . like that . . .?"

His voice was sharp. It was like no other voice she had ever heard. It said, "Shut up! And get yourself under control."

CHAPTER III

It was difficult for Kay Forrest to realize that she had been witness to a murder, to remember that back yonder at the edge of the road was an empty car and the body of a man. It was even more difficult to make herself believe that the stony-faced person at her side had just taken a human life.

Her nerves were shattered, her eyes clouded with a terror of apprehension. Her thoughts darted off at tangents, but returned always to that sprawling figure by the side of the road back yonder. She found herself thinking, "Harvey is dead . . ."

"Kirk will be punished . . ."

Then, out of the silence came Kirk's voice. It was detached, impersonal, casual. It frightened her. He said, "Sorry, Kay," and when she tried to answer him, the words would not come.

He said then, "Pull yourself together."

She moistened dry lips. "Oh, Kirk . . ."

"It was rotten. But I couldn't help it. I lost my head."

"Yes . . ."

"It's done." His voice was flat. "There ain't anything we can do to undo it."

She dabbed at dry eyes with a bit of handkerchief.

He asked, "Still scared?"

"Yes."

"Got to get over it. Right now."

He was right. Of course. Then words came from her, words freighted with hysteria. "Oh, Kirk . . . what will they do?"

He said, "Nothing."

"But when they find out . . ."

"They won't. Nobody saw. Except you. And you won't tell."

"I'm afraid . . ."

"Of course you are. I'm afraid, too."

Queer how his calmness was steadying her jagged nerves. She heard him speaking again. "There are certain things you've got to remember. The first one is that we never went near that road tonight. We never saw Jackson."

"But if they ask me . . .?"

"They won't ask you. My voice was low. Insistent. Beating through her terror with a strange, hypnotic effect. "They'll never think of us in connection with it."

"But if they do . . .?"

"They won't. Unless you give yourself away." He drove on in silence. Then, "Feeling some better?"

"I—I don't know. I'm sick . . ."

"Sure you are. But there are some things you've got to understand." It was an adult talking to a frightened child. "Try to understand this: right or wrong—Jackson is dead. You are the only person who saw me do it. And you're not going to talk. Understand?"

"No . . ."

"If the truth ever came out, they'd hang me. Harvey Jackson was popular in Beverly. I'm unpopular. I wouldn't have a chance. But remember this: hanging me isn't going to bring him back to life."

He was quiet. Logical. She had a fleeting vision of Kirk on the gallows . . . the same Kirk Reynolds who had danced with her that night, who had been a part of a gay evening.

"They'd hang me," Kirk was saying, "and it wouldn't do Jackson any good."

A simple statement. An unanswerable one. He spoke again, "Can you keep it to yourself?"

"I'll try."

"That's not enough."

"But if they should suspect . . ."

"Get this!" His voice was suddenly sharp. It knifed into her. "And get it straight; you're going to string along with me."

CRAB SALAD
See Recipe Below.

Salads for Summer Meals

When the mercury soars skyward and appetites are on the wane, nothing tastes quite so good as a crisp, cool mixture of fresh greens, or fruits, or vegetables with a tart, taste-teasing dressing.

Salads are summer favorites. There's hardly a dish that's so simple yet so satisfying to make, and there's such a pleasant way of making sure that we get the minerals and vitamins we need!

Suggestions on Salads.

Salad ingredients must be clean and cold and crisp. Contrast is important, too—contrast in textures, in flavors, and in colors. Combine crisp foods with soft; sharp, pungent-tasting foods with mild-flavored ones; pale, uninteresting looking foods with foods that are vividly colored. Make your summer salads as light or as substantial as you please. Find a few good basic recipes, and vary them to suit yourself. Here are some of my own favorites—practical, everyday recipes that are easy to prepare and serve, yet delicious enough for almost any social occasion.

Summer Tossed Salad.
Dip edges of lettuce leaves in paprika and arrange in salad bowl. Add green pepper rings, cucumber slices, radish roses and tomatoes, cut lengthwise in eighths. Toss together with french dressing made as follows: grate ½ clove garlic on two tablespoons granulated sugar. Add one tablespoon salt, one tablespoon paprika, one cup salad oil and ½ cup lemon juice. Shake vigorously, chill, and shake again, before mixing with salad.

Festive Potato Salad.
(Serves 5)
3 eggs (hard cooked)
4 cups cooked potatoes (cut fine)
½ cup green pepper (cut fine)
1 bunch green onions (cut fine)
½ cup celery (cut fine)
¼ cup sweet pickles (cut fine)
1 cup mayonnaise-type salad dressing
Salt to taste
Cut hard cooked eggs in slices. Combine ingredients in order given, reserving a few of the egg slices for garnishing. Chill. Serve in large bowl lined with lettuce. Garnish with radish roses and hard cooked eggs.

Crab Salad.
(Serves 5)
1 13-ounce tin crabmeat
¾ cup celery (cut fine)
¼ cup sweet pickles (cut fine)
2 hard cooked eggs—riced egg yolk
¾ cup mayonnaise dressing
1 head lettuce
1 tablespoon capers
Flake crabmeat and remove membrane. Add celery, sweet pickle and egg white (finely cut). Mix with mayonnaise dressing. Arrange on bed of crisp lettuce leaves and garnish with egg yolk (riced) and capers.

Frozen Tomato Salad.
1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 cup celery and celery leaves (chopped)
2 tablespoons diced onion
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
6 whole cloves
6 peppercorns
Sprig thyme
1 bay leaf
1 cup whipping cream (whipped)
½ teaspoon paprika
Soak gelatin in cold water. Heat tomatoes, celery, onion and all seasonings in a saucepan and simmer gently for about 10 minutes. Strain and add at once to the softened gelatin. Mix thoroughly and chill. When mixture begins to thicken, fold in the whipped cream. Pour into freezing tray and place in freezing compartment until thick. When frozen, unmold and serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Marshmallow Mint Salad.
(Serves 6)

1 package (¾ pound) marshmallows
1 tablespoon fruit juice
Peppermint extract
Green vegetable coloring
½ cup mayonnaise
¼ cup mixed fruits (cut in small pieces)

1 cup whipping cream (whipped)
Place marshmallows and fruit juice in saucepan and heat over low heat. Fold over and over until marshmallows are about half melted. Remove from heat and continue folding until mixture is smooth and fluffy. Cool. Then add peppermint extract and green food coloring (these can be omitted, if desired). Blend in mayonnaise and fruits and fold in whipped cream. Turn into individual molds and chill in refrigerator until firm. Unmold on lacy endive ring and garnish with a sprig of mint and halved maraschino cherry.

Cinderella Salad.
(Serves 6)

2 cups cooked lamb (cut in small cubes)
¾ cup french dressing
2 tablespoons fresh mint (chopped)
½ cup cooked peas
½ cup cooked carrots
2 cups shredded cabbage
Salt and pepper to taste
Place lamb in salad bowl, add french dressing and chopped mint. Chill in refrigerator for one hour. Then add remaining ingredients and toss together lightly, adding additional french dressing, if desired. Garnish with strips of green pepper and wedges of tomatoes.

French Provincial Style
Of Furniture Is Revived

French provincial furniture, now that it is being revived, is sure to be with us for a long time for it is beautiful in itself, it is moderately priced, and it can be combined so well with early American styles. Many women, who like a little variety in their rooms, will delight to find that the simple, graceful chairs of beechwood and of cherry in this French vein mix perfectly with maple tables and chairs.

There are charming upholstered armchairs, too, from which to choose, and many handsome little occasional tables, some of the tiered variety, others with sunken receptacles for plants, and still others for bedside use and for service for afternoon tea or after dinner coffee.

Whether you are doing an entire room or are merely investing in a piece or two you'll have no difficulty in finding charming furniture in French provincial style.

How A World Traveler Gets The News

Zane Grey who has spent most of his time in far away deserts and mountains says:

"Most of my time has been spent far from the haunts of men... naturally I lost touch, failed to keep abreast of the times. Upon my return from the desert or the sea, I would try to remedy the lack by glutting myself with daily news. Then one day The Reader's Digest fell into my hands. Here was condensed the most important and vital thought of the day. Instead of wading through thousands of words, I could open a Reader's Digest on an island off the coast of far-away New Zealand, and find out what was going on in the civilized world."

Over 5,000 hours of reading time are required to select the material for a single issue of The Reader's Digest. Yet you pay only 25c for this monthly selection of the world's finest literature. Over THREE MILLION people now read and enjoy every issue.

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative, Seventh Senatorial District General Assembly of Illinois

JOY AND REGRET

Mingled feelings of joy and regret always accompany the striking of bills from the calendar in wholesale lots as is always done in the closing weeks of the General Assembly. There is joy when bills are stricken when there has been a great deal of controversy and there is no longer the need to watch closely every development. In the case of all bills, however, good or bad, in my own judgement there are others who sponsored the bills who feel otherwise. Hours of work in drafting bills, printing bills, committee hearings on bills, sometimes traveling on tours of inspection and, finally, the necessary effort to push the bills through the various stages of legislative procedure, are all represented in the lives of many bills. One cannot help but feel sorry for sponsors of bills who have sincerely worked on bills only to have them stricken in the final jam.

REACH CONCURRENCE STAGE

On Thursday night the last of the House bills in the House were ordered tabled. The Senate has done the same with its own bills and in the final week the two branches of the legislature will work on the bills from the other side of the State House. Considerable time will also be given over to the procedure known as concurrence in amendments for if a bill, for example, has passed the House and in passing the Senate has been amended, it must return to the House for concurrence. If the House refuses to concur, the bill is sent to a conference committee. If the conference committee does not reach an agreement before sine die adjournment the bill dies in the conference committee.

STUDY RELIEF BILLS

The unemployment relief problem is before the House for consideration in the final week. Various social agencies have been demanding an appropriation of six million dollars a month from the state but the appropriation bills call for an expenditure of $72,000,000. Appropriations are made for a two year period which would mean a monthly appropriation of $3,000,000 a month. There is however, a provision over which considerable discussion has taken place which provides that a sum not to exceed $4,000,000 a month may be spent. If $4,000,000 a month is spent it can readily be seen that the money appropriated will be spent in eighteen months and the legislature would be called into special session to make another appropriation. Certainly this is the most serious question before the General Assembly, and the members are caught between those who urge greater spending for relief and a great many other purposes and those who believe that taxes and spending must be held down if the state is to maintain a sound financial position. On the surface, the most unpopular legislators are those who vote against large appropriations or increased taxes because the groups demanding funds are so much more active in their lobbying than are taxpayers' organizations or individual taxpayers.

School Financing

School financing is as yet unsettled. When House Bills on third reading were tabled on Thursday an effort was made by Benjamin Adamowski to save House Bill No. 247 introduced by Representative Boyle, the appropriations leader for the administration The House, however, refused to exempt No. 247 from the tabling order. Thus H. B. 599 will have to be the Bill which is passed. This has been amended but is still about a million dollars higher than the administration wishes to accept. The controversial section is that dealing with flat grants to high schools. The original bill carried a $5 flat grant provision. Amendments have cut this amount to $2.50. Amendments have also made the teachers pensions for down state teachers payable so far as the State's contribution on a current payment plan rather than by having a large accumulation of reserve funds.

The very controversial liquor regulation bill H. B. No. 802 was saved from tabling by being in the Enrolling and Engrossing room. There have been so many amendments adopted that it is doubtful whether even the sponsor of the bill, Paul Powell of Harrisburg, recognizes his own bill.

Table Anti-Spy Bill

Probably the greatest joy in business circles is over the tabling of H. B. No. 94 known throughout the session as the Anti-Spy Bill. Even the sponsor of the Bill, Harry McCaskrin of Rock Island, I have been told, decided that his bill went too far when it prohibited an employer from finding out what was going on in his own business if he suspected foul work among his employees.

The heaviest work of the entire session will take place in the final week. Tempers will correspond to the prevailing heat of Springfield climate. Many of the affectionate eulogies spoken at the Biennial House dinner last Thursday night when gifts were presented to the Speaker, the Floor Leaders, the Clerks, the Doorkeepers, the Postmistress and other employees of the House will be forgotten temporarily at least.

MOKENA

Our little Mokena paper carries messages many miles from home. When Mrs. Wm. Lowe and daughter had planned to surprise Mrs. Sarah E. Seales former Doctor's wife of Mokena now of Los Angeles, Calif., they found that she had already read the Mokena items that they were going to travel west, and that she was looking forward to their arrival.

A son was born last Saturday June 17 in St. Francis Hospital in Blue Island to Mr. and Mrs. Harold (Patty) Homering. He has been named Harold Bernard. Mrs. Homering and infant son are spending a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rauch in their home in Blue Island.

The Misses Adeline and Adamarie Semmler entertained members of the Trinity Evangelical Sunday School class in their home Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Wm. Semmler received word Wednesday of the death of her cousin, Wm. Ketner, who was electrocuted in his garage at his home in Joliet, while he was repairing an electric light. The ground was wet and his feet were wet, he having on bedroom slippers at the time. The funeral takes place today.

Mrs. L. G. Bruder will entertain the members of the Tinley Park Woman's Club Board in her home this afternoon.

Oliver Lauffer suffered a broken wrist in a ball game last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Berle Needham and family of Chicago moved Monday into the Scheiblich house on Front street.

When Leon Tonn arose Monday morning he found that during the night someone had cut the wire on his kitchen screen door and unhooked the hook, but the locked door was not molested. Also a screen on a window was removed.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Haag returned from their honeymoon last Saturday. A group of friends chivariated them last Saturday evening.

Geo. Haehnlein broke his left wrist while playing ball in Joliet Sunday.

IN MEMORIAM

KNIPPEL—In fond and loving memory of our dear son and brother, Raymond J. Knippel, who left us so suddenly twelve years ago, June 29, 1927.

Days of sadness still come over us,
Tears in silence often flow,
For memory keeps him ever near us,
Tho he died twelve years ago.

Relentless death amongst us came,
Bitter pain to impart;
It took a loved one from our home,
But never from our heart.

THE GENERALS GO A-VISITING

Brazil is the largest and most powerful nation in South America. She is also our best commercial customer in Latin America. On occasion, she has not felt too kindly toward the U. S. Someone in the State Department thereupon suggested that General Geo. Marshall, the next Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army pay a formal visit to Brazil. He was acclaimed in Brazil although there was little publicity about his visit in our newspapers. This week General Marshall brought with him, General Pedro Aurelio Goes Monteiro, the Chief of Staff of the Brazilian Army and known as the "General Grant of South America". A great military display was accorded General Monteiro and now he will spend three weeks inspecting our Army posts and points of interest. It is hinted that he will also go to Germany where Hitler will accord the General a demonstration to out-demonstrate all other demonstrations. Is this the beginning of a series of visits by Generals in which one nation will seek to out-vie and out-do other nations in impressing the Army leaders of foreign lands.

There Is No Fixed Relationship Between Hog and Steer Prices

Some people have claimed that average hog prices bear a fixed relationship to average steer prices and consequently rise or fall as steer prices go up or down. A study of the subject and the statistics shown in the chart above, however, does not bear out such a claim. As a matter of fact, since 1890 (war years excluded) the ratio of hog prices to cattle prices has been one of constant change. During this period hog prices were higher than cattle prices in 19 years and lower than cattle prices in the other 24. Almost every year saw a change in this ratio between cattle and hog prices.

One significant thing shown by the statistics is that when the supply of pork and lard to be consumed has been greater relatively than that of beef, the price of hogs has been lower relatively than that of steers, and, vice versa, when the supply of beef has been relatively higher than that of pork and lard, the price of steers has been relatively lower than that of hogs.

This principle is particularly well illustrated in the period 1927 to 1936 inclusive when hog prices were consistently lower (by varying amounts) than steer prices. During this period, the chart shows that the amount of pork and lard to be consumed was the highest on record for a like period, while beef on the other hand was less than average.

Other factors that have had a bearing on this price ratio are the volume of pork and lard that can be exported (now almost negligible), and the preference of consumers for pork or for beef, mostly due, of course, to a favorable price necessary to move increased supplies of one or the other into consumption. Naturally, the more hogs or the more cattle that come to market, the lower the price will be.

These are the economic factors that cause the price of one to be higher, or to be lower, than the price of the other, regardless of whether the livestock is marketed at central markets or at interior markets.

The village street department has had men on the job this week patching the chuck holes in various streets of the village.

W. J. Leahy Rock Island Official Retires

With the the retirement of W. J. Leahy, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Rock Island Lines, on July 1, after 52 years of continuous service with that railroad, the active career of one of the nation's best known railroad passenger officers will come to a close. Mr. Leahy's retirement was announced in a bulletin issued by E. M. Durham, Jr., the road's Chief Executive officer.

William J. Leahy began his railroad career 52 years ago as a traveling passenger agent for the Rock Island Lines at New York City. Thru successive promotions as passenger agent at Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia, Pa., General Eastern Passenger Agent in New York, Assistant General Passenger Agent in St. Louis, First Assistant General

W. J. Leahy

Passenger Agent and then General Passenger Agent in Chicago, he rose to the position of Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager in 1920 and was promoted to Passenger Traffic Manager June 1, 1936. Mr. Leahy's entire business career was spent in the passenger department of this one railroad.

In his long service with the Rock Island, Mr. Leahy had the distinction of having been that railroad's personal escort for six Presidents of the United States: Presidents McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding and Coolidge on trips they made over that line during their presidencies.

The fleet of six streamlined, diesel powered ROCKET trains that brought new fame to the Rock Island were inaugurated September 19, 1937, during Leahy's administration as the road's Passenger Traffic Manager.

As chairman of the Standing Committee for Western Territory of the American Association of Passenger Traffic Officers, Leahy has always been in the vanguard of the movement for the present low passenger fares available on railroads in western territory.

He is an honorary life member of the American Association of Railroad Ticket Agents.

Approximately six months before America entered the World War William J. Leahy was commissioned a Major of the Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army. Called into active service soon after the start of hostilities, he served until well after the close of the war and was a member of the committee of army officers that selected the various sites for cantonments in the United States at which the American Army was raised.

Rear Admiral L. R. Leahy of the United States Navy is W. J. Leahy's brother.

Mr. Leahy was born in Elmira, N. Y., July 25, 1867 and attended school at Buffalo. His father was one of four brothers all of whom, after they grew to manhood on the New York farm on which they were born, became locomotive engineers and served one railroad continuously thruout their lives.

Asked about his plans for the future, Mr. Leahy who is still in robust health, said: "Only once in my life have I broken 100 at golf. I have had an idea it was because I was too busy to play often that I did not play better. It shall be one of my purposes to find out whether my reasoning on this point has been correct."

Mr. Leahy resides at 10501 South Hoyne Ave., in the Beverly Hills section of Chicago. His son, William Hewitt Leahy, a Chicago business man, lives close by.

Curious picture developed in hearing on the Mead bill to extend loans to small business . . . Dangers in the bill pointed out . . . Financing of TVA becomes four-sided question . . . European dictators jolted by the reception given King George and Queen Elizabeth in Canada and the United States.

WASHINGTON.—A bit of testimony before the temporary national economic committee, put together with President Roosevelt's enthusiastic endorsement of the bill of Senator James M. Mead of New York for loans to small business, and then added to the frequently stated doctrine of the President that one of the causes of the bust of 1929 was a tremendous increase in over-capacity by our producers, unaccompanied by increased spending power to take up the slack, presents a curious picture.

It almost justifies the pessimism of Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the federal reserve board, as to the good that the Mead bill would do if enacted.

The curious part of the whole thing is that Mr. Roosevelt, it would seem, would encourage the same sort of increase in over-capacity by means of the Mead bill that he began deploring in his 1932 acceptance speech. He spoke then of the vast profits of the corporations in the good years, and wanted to know what had become of them. "Some of them," he declared, "have gone into increases of plant, now standing stark and idle."

His theory then, as enunciated many times since, was that if this money, instead of being put into unneeded additions to plant capacity, had been paid out in wages, or even dividends, the discrepancy between buying power and producing power would not have zoomed to the point where it produced the 1929 crash and the depression.

Reference to this testimony leads to speculation as to whether government aid to the little fellows may not work the same havoc that greed on the part of the big fellows produced in 1929.

Points Out Inherent Dangers in Mead Bill

On the stand was T. N. B. Hicks Jr. urging, on behalf of the Wyoming valley industrial development fund, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., more liberal credit. He said there was a small silk throwing company which would buy additional machines if it could borrow cheaply.

"Are you satisfied," inquired Senator Joe O'Mahoney of Wyoming (no connection with the Wyoming valley in question), "that there is a market for the product of this company if it were enabled to acquire the machinery?"

"The company already has the business, Senator," replied Mr. Hicks. "They are already farming it out under contract."

"And not doing it themselves," said Mr. Hicks. "They want to do it in our community."

"Well, if the business is being performed on contract," continued O'Mahoney, "this financing would merely mean shifting the production from one plant to another plant."

"Yes," said Mr. Hicks, "for all practical purposes. It means, on the other hand, in our particular community, three hundred jobs, Senator."

"But," retorted O'Mahoney, "three hundred jobs in your community taken away from some other community."

This is not cited by the writer to demonstrate that the Mead bill is bad, or would work harm. But it is cited to show that there are certain dangers in the Mead bill, just as there are inherent dangers in any government control of credit, or anything else, for that matter, which arbitrarily changes the lives and habits of people.

Sometimes There Are Four Sides to a Question

Sometimes there are four sides to a question, instead of only two. The authorization measure for the Tennessee Valley authority to issue $100,000,000 in bonds to finance the purchase of the private utility properties in Tennessee seems to be such a case.

Introduced by Senator George W. Norris, it passed the senate with little or no discussion, but since then for a time has been stymied in the house appropriations committee. Actually it was held up by the coal operators. They pointed out to committee members that this was nearly twice as much money as TVA needed for paying the Commonwealth and Southern and the Electric Bond and Share for the properties of their subsidiaries.

"What," they demanded, "does TVA need with the forty odd millions in excess of that amount?"

The inference taken by the coal people of course was that TVA would build additional hydro electric plants. That is where the coal interests come in, for obviously every time a hydro plant is built just that much of coal market departs forever, no matter how the resulting electricity is used.

Behind the scenes the private utility folks have been in a quandary. Naturally they have the same interest as the coal people in preventing, if possible, further invasion of the electric field by the government. They are especially close to the coal people in their interests since most of the private utility executives now figure that current can be produced more cheaply from coal, by using modern methods than it can be produced by water power, if due allowance is made in computing its cost for interest on the cost of the hydro electric plant, and for taxes.

Which brings in another angle; for the state, county and municipal governments in Tennessee were anxious to force a provision into the bill which would require the TVA and the local agencies set-up for public distribution of electricity to pay into the state and local treasuries the same amount of money each year which they would have paid had they continued.

Don't Like to Have Public Power Systems Handicapped

This is a sore point with the public ownership advocates. They do not like to have the public power systems handicapped with this charge of taxes. Naturally the private utility people are keen for it, contending that no "yardstick" approaches fairness unless this is included. In fact taxes and a comparable amount of interest are the two chief advantages which public electric systems have had over privately owned systems in fixing low rates.

David E. Lilienthal pointed out in the TVA special committee hearings at Knoxville last summer that the government could borrow money for 2 per cent while private enterprise would have to pay much more. But private utility men have been contending ever since this is only part of the story—that in fixing rates the TVA has made no charge whatever for the millions of dollars interest every year the taxpayers have to pay for the cost of the TVA project. Also that in local public ownership systems 45 per cent of the cost would be a free grant from PWA, with the other 55 per cent at a low rate of interest.

But the utility people would like to see government money actually paid for the Tennessee properties, and the stupid possibility of competition between private and public ownership systems prevented. So they would like to see the bill passed, with certain amendments. The coal people don't care much about the amendments, but want them written in if the bill is to pass.

Reception of British Rulers in Canada Jolts Dictators

Whether British Prime Minister Chamberlain "planned it that way" may never be known, but the visit of the king and queen to Canada may easily have stayed the hands of Mussolini and Hitler for some time to come.

The reports of the tremendous ovation which their majesties received from Quebec to Vancouver and back must have surprised and startled the foreign offices of Berlin and Rome as much as they did the Canadian politicians. There is no speculation about this. Eminent political leaders of all parties in Canada frankly said so to visiting American newspaper men.

In short, the greeting of the Canadians, no matter what was the mother country to their own fathers and mothers, put an entirely different face on the probabilities as to what Canada would do if Great Britain should become involved in a war.

It is a truism in politics, certainly in the United States and probably in Canada, that it is not the truth which is important, but what people believe. Carrying on the thought a bit further, it is not what the people believe which is really important—in between elections—but what the politicians they have elected to represent them think the people believe.

It is as simple as that.

Mental Attitude of Crowds Big Surprise of Visit

British and American newspaper men on the "pilot" train which ran always—until it neared Washington and developed trouble—a little ahead of the royal train, were amazed at the outpourings. They would be told, not only by the Canadian officials, but by their Canadian newspaper colleagues, that this particular town would not be worth while—that it had been kept on the schedule through a mistake, and that only a few hundred people could possibly be there.

Then they would arrive and the whole surrounding countryside would have apparently turned out, for there would be thousands.

Even more important, it was the mental attitude of the crowds which had been appraised even more inaccurately in advance. Their majesties had been warned not to expect too much. The people in one community, they were told, would be mostly Scotch, and hence dour and cold, though pleasant, while in another community most of the people would be Poles, Germans, Russians, etc., who could not be expected to be too enthusiastic.

SOLOMON: A RULER WHO BEGAN WELL

LESSON TEXT—1 Kings 3:5-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart . . . that I may discern between good and bad.—1 Kings 3:9.

Success or failure in life is determined by the measure of a man's devotion to God and obedience to the will of God. We speak now of real success, not according to the ideas of the world. We are concerned with what a man is and what he does for God, not with what he may happen to possess.

An excellent outline taken from Points for Emphasis, by Dr. Hight C. Moore, most effectively presents the lesson.

I. Wisdom Offered (v. 5).

Solomon had properly opened his reign by going to Gibeon to offer a thousand burnt offerings because he "loved the Lord" (v. 3). Having returned from his day of worship, he had fallen into a deep sleep when God spoke to him saying, "Ask what I shall give thee." It was an unusual offer, a kind of blank check that God gives only to those whom He can trust to fill it out right, as MacLaren suggests.

Sometimes we wish God would give us such an opportunity. "That is just what He has done. He has appeared to you not in dreams, but in broad daylight and by His Son Jesus Christ has said as plainly as He could, Ask and it shall be given you." He has repeated it three times, saying, ask, seek, find. And then He has returned to say, "Everyone that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." We have no right "to say that Solomon was more favored than we. We are more favored than he. If we have not, it is because we ask not. If we lose peace and joy, happiness and heaven, it is all for want of asking" (Joseph Hammond).

II. Wisdom Chosen (vv. 6-9).

The noble and intelligent choice of Solomon has been much admired and rightly so, for he chose the greatest gift that could come to any man, "an understanding heart." He might have asked for money or power, but with the lack of wisdom to use them properly they would have been a curse to him and to others. Long life is but a continued blight to a foolish man because it only extends the time of his folly. All things in the way of possessions must be outside of a man, therefore they may be lost or misused. But what he is and what he has in his heart, these are what make a man worth while. Solomon showed the beginning of wisdom when he chose, above all things, an understanding heart.

III. Wisdom Granted (vv. 10-14).

There can be no higher word of commendation than to say that a man's choice "pleased the Lord" (v. 10). To have that attitude of mind and heart which expresses itself in words and actions so exactly in conformity to the will of God that the Almighty Himself is pleased, is to be ready for God's unlimited blessing. Solomon asked for wisdom, and because he received that gift from God, he was ready to receive riches, honor, and power. We may by God's grace go the same way and take from His blessed hand numberless gifts.

Note the qualifying word "if" in verse 14. Solomon failed God in his later years as king. The tragic results are written for all to read. That way none of us should ever go. The lesson is plain—faith takes blessing from God; unbelief brings failure and sorrow. Let everyone that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

IV. Wisdom Exercised (v. 15).

When Solomon awoke from his dream he showed his faith in God's promise and in fact demonstrated the wisdom which was now his possession, by returning to his capital city, Jerusalem, to stand before the ark of the covenant in reverent worship, then to lead his people in a public service of confession and consecration, which was followed by a great religious feast which drew the king and "all his servants," the people of Israel, into a blessed unity before the Lord.

One could wish and pray that all the rulers of the earth whether in democracies or under dictatorships might have the wisdom and humility of Solomon. The world is in utter confusion and really confesses that it does not know the way out of its difficulty. It has not yet turned to God. If rulers and people would fall upon their faces before Him in contrition and supplication, it would not be long before we would see both spiritual and material peace and prosperity.

Make It Positive

Scripture seems to make it positive that every soul has everlastingness, but Scripture also seems to make it positive that for Jesus' kind of everlastingness every soul has got to qualify.

Making Good the Boast

A nervously over-wrought man may be entertaining, but you are sorry he hasn't more repose. After all, people that "rest" you are the most agreeable.

Work is a great sedative, but it doesn't necessarily bring happiness. If you stop to bemoan, down you go!

His Problem

Little Johnny should have been hard at his homework. As it was, his father found him listening to the wireless and sucking his pencil.

"Well," asked father, "why don't you get on with your work?" "I can't, dad," came Johnny's reply, "until I've heard the latest news bulletin. You see, I've got to draw a map of Europe."

Breath of Air

Friend—Hello, George. Out for a stroll this fine evening? Farmer—Yep! I need a mouthful of fresh air after being cooped up on a hunert-sixty acres all day.

Mrs. Skjold—I wish to buy a fashionable dress. Clerk—Yes, madam, will you have it too tight, too long or both?

July Fourth May Be Independence Day— But It's Also Famous for Other Reasons

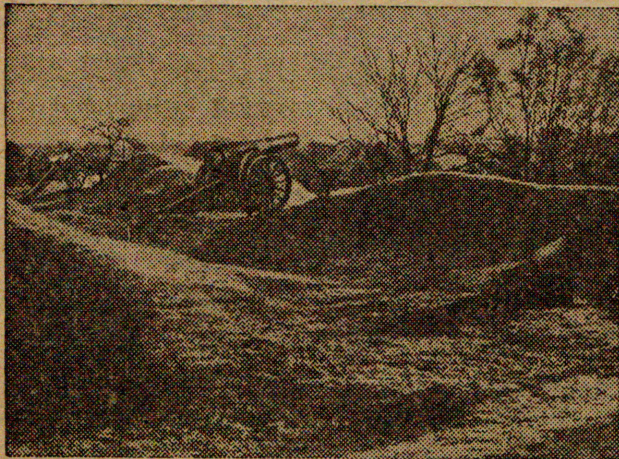

1 Here is Jack Dempsey as he appeared 20 years ago this July Fourth, the day he won the heavy-weight boxing championship from Jess Willard by a knockout in Toledo, Ohio. This year a celebration, and possible re-enactment of the title bout is scheduled at Toledo, with both Willard and Dempsey participating.

HISTORY will cherish July Fourth as the day the United States declared its independence from Great Britain. But before 1776, and in subsequent years, a notable list of occasions has grown around the date. For instance: Poet Nathaniel Hawthorne was born this day in 1804; Giuseppe Garibaldi, the unifier of Italy, was born in 1807; George M. Cohan, the actor, is 61 years old July Fourth. Mary Hunt, organizer of the bureau of scientific temperance investigation, was born this day in 1830, and the event is observed annually by the W. C. T. U.

History also tells us that on July 4, 1894, the first automobile ever built commercially made its trial run at Kokomo, Ind. This was the automobile of Elwood Haynes, built by Edgar L. Apperson of Detroit. Other important July Fourth anniversaries are pictured here, anniversaries which Americans usually forget when they shoot off their firecrackers and wave flags, just as they often forget the real significance of Independence Day in their exuberance over the occasion:

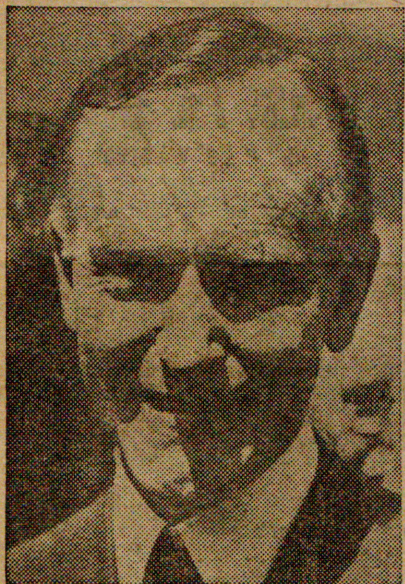

2 July 4, 1826, was a fateful date in United States history, for within a few hours of each other two ex-Presidents passed away. They were John Adams (above) and Thomas Jefferson. A few years later the Grim Reaper struck again on Independence Day. July 4, 1831, found President James Monroe passing away.

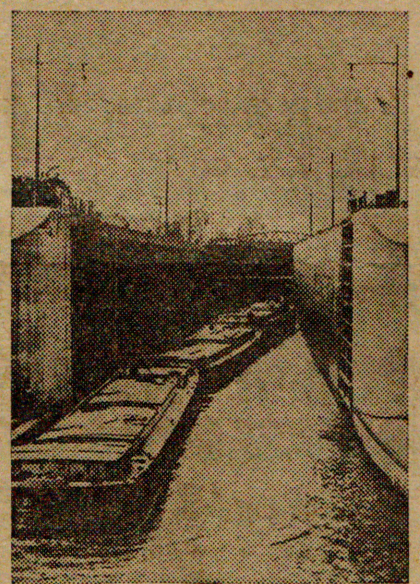

3 One of the Civil war's bloodiest battles came to an end on July 4, 1863, when Vicksburg surrendered. The battlefield appears above in its present state, reconstructed as a national park.

4 This year on July Fourth will be commemorated the 150th anniversary of adoption by congress of the first protective tariff legislation, constructed largely by James Madison.

5 Three Presidents died on July Fourth; another was born that date. The late Calvin Coolidge first saw light of day on July 4, 1872.

6 Pictured above is the Erie canal. Now a commonplace fixture, it drew great attention when work was started on it July 4, 1817.

Newest 'Streamlined' Turkey Makes Debut at Poultry Show

CLEVELAND.—The modernized small turkey, goal of poultry geneticists of the United States department of agriculture, will be shown in its present stage of development at the seventh world's poultry congress, to be held in Cleveland July 28 to August 7.

The display, part of the government exhibit at the congress, will include two live small-type white turkeys—a young tom and a young hen.

Exact reproductions in wax of four dressed turkeys also will be shown, two of them modeled after male and female small-type turkeys with dressed weights of approximately 14 and 8 pounds, respectively, and two after male and female of the common bronze variety, with dressed weights of approximately 21 and 14 pounds, respectively.

Seek Family Turkey.

The aim of the breeding work is to develop a small turkey to fit the modern small oven, and suitable for the modern small family, according to Berley Winton, in charge of the department's poultry-husbandry investigations. There is a growing demand for small market turkeys, he says. The smaller turkeys out of the annual crops of the standard varieties sell at a premium of 1/2 to 5 cents a pound.

It will take probably another five years before the desired characteristics are "fixed" in the new small-type turkey, Winton points out. For that reason, the department will distribute no breeding stock, hatching eggs, or poult until the geneticists are satisfied that the small-type turkey is "genetically pure" for small size and other desirable qualities, and able to reproduce itself, true to type, in the future.

The department geneticists want to establish in the new turkey the small size of the White Austrian variety imported from Scotland and of strains of wild turkeys from Virginia, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Arizona. They hope the new turkey will also inherit the meaty breast of the wild turkey.

Reinforce Color Inheritance.

To reinforce the inheritance for white color, the geneticists are using the White Holland in the breeding program to produce the small-type turkey. They are also counting on the White Holland—and two other domestic varieties, the bronze and the black—to contribute early maturity and other desirable characteristics.

If the department men succeed, the small type turkey will be white, with a compact body, short legs, a long keel bone, and plenty of breast meat. It would mature in 24 to 26 weeks, the young hens weighing 6 1/2 to 9 pounds dressed, and the young toms between 11 and 15 1/2 pounds dressed.

Other goals for the new turkey are that hens kept for breeding purposes be able to produce a reasonably large number of eggs by June 1. Ninety per cent or more of the eggs would be fertile and 80 per cent or more of the fertile eggs would hatch.

Devises Mineral Paint to Resist Thermite Bomb Heat

LONDON.—A mineral paint that can resist the intense heat of a thermite bomb has been produced by the research chemists of Imperial Chemical Industries.

Tests have shown that beams and floors treated with the substance have remained undamaged after a bomb has burned itself out, while a similar structure, untreated, would be consumed with fire in less than half an hour.

The preparation is based on materials similar to those used in the pyramids and is cheap to apply, costing less than two cents a pound.

7 Another anniversary related to July Fourth is the Washington monument, whose cornerstone was laid that day in 1848.

Diamonds Remain Precious Because They're Baffling

LONDON.—If diamonds could be made by the local druggist or baked in big blast furnaces, they would be less precious to us than they now are, in spite of their glittering rainbow flashing.

Like the ancients, whose passion it was to make gold from baser metals, modern scientists, who have been able to make almost everything conceivable artificially, from silk to peppermint, have striven to make diamonds as well.

But after years of experiment and study, nature's recipe for diamonds is still as much of a secret as ever.

Indeed, there are probably plenty of diamonds in the world and no need for artificial ones, but the best diamond fields are owned by a very few corporations which have no intention of producing so many gems that they become cheap. And so long as the tiny crystals obtained by melting pure iron with sugar charcoal in an electric furnace, and then plunging the melted mass into cold water, are not improved upon, there is little likelihood that diamonds will be sold in 10-cent stores.

Although their history is still a scientific mystery, we know that diamonds are a form of carbon. If you hold a diamond ring in a fire for a few minutes you will have a little mass of melted gold left, but not a sign of a diamond.

We know, too, that we can make graphite, another form of carbon, from diamonds—but once the diamond has been changed into graphite, it cannot be changed back into diamond again.

AROUND THE HOUSE

In the Living Room.—Too many cushions on the davenport often spoil its proportion.

Garnishes.—A true garnish supplies flavor and appeals to the eye. Serve slices of lemon with fish, slices of lemon or orange with iced tea, chopped parsley as a topping for cooked potatoes, rice or macaroni and green pepper or pimiento strips on the top of potato salads.

To Make Meat Tender.—Meat is often tough because it has not been hung long enough before cooking. To make sure of steaks or cutlets being tender, soak them in olive oil for an hour or two before cooking.

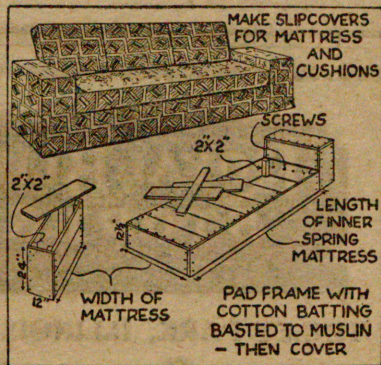

Cleaning Cement Ornaments.—Use a medium stiff wire brush to clean the bird baths and other cement ornaments in the garden.

Economical Dessert.—One and a half cups of cooked prunes (chopped) added to a quart of partially frozen vanilla ice cream makes an economical dessert.

When Mirrors Become Stained.—Make a paste of fine whiting and methylated spirit. Rub it over the mirror and leave to dry; then clean the mirror in the ordinary way.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

THERE comes a letter from a reader who says: "Thanks for the article telling how to make a chair of lumber and cover it. I wish there were more things that husbands and wives could do together. I have made all the curtains for our house and some slipcovers, but this chair that we both worked on was much more interesting."

Anyone that can make 3 wooden boxes and then screw or bolt them together, can make this davenport frame. The center box is made to fit an inner spring mattress of any size desired. All the other dimensions are given here.

One way to make the cushions is to bind flat sheets of newspapers together and then pad this base with cotton. Covering material in a rather heavy, rough textured cotton goods in a plain color or a conventional design will harmonize best with the modern lines of this piece of furniture.
